

ASU Faculty receive awards

Written by

Wednesday, 12 September 2007 19:00

Three faculty members and an academic department at Appalachian State University have received awards from the university's Cratis D. Williams Graduate School. They are history professor Dr. Jeffrey Bortz, biology professor Dr. Shea Tuberty and psychology professor Denise Martz. Boaz received the graduate school's 100 Scholars Research Award for his research and publications on the Mexican labor industry. Tuberty received the Wachovia Award for Environmental Studies for his metal toxicity studies. Martz received the Distinguished Graduate Faculty Award for her excellence in providing professional preparation of graduate students. The Department of Health, Leisure and Exercise Science's graduate program in exercise science was also honored.