

A bill that met Senate approval this week would bar local governments from passing ordinances that restrict distribution of newspapers by people who stand on any street, highway or right of way. The unanimously approved bill was sought by the North Carolina Press Association and goes to the House for consideration.