Boston authorities are investigating what appears to be a homicide as the body of a 23-year-old ASU alum, a native of Charlotte, was found yesterday after a massive search there. Jon Dailey disappeared from his Boston apartment last week, last seen by his roommate Oct. 2 at his apartment. He was heard leaving the apartment around 9 p.m. that night, but his motorcycle was still at the apartment and he did not show up for work Friday at American Apparel in Cambridge, according to police. The body was found yesterday, but investigators have not released how he died, but sources say Dailey's body was tied to a cinder block and weighed down. Dailey's aunt, Bonita Absher, told WSOC-TV that "He had just the clothes on his back," and that "He didn't have ID with him. We think he may have had $100, but it was like he was casually going out at 8:30 in the evening to get some coffee." Dailey was in Boston studying architecture.
