

DWI defendants could be photographed by police

Written by Lauren Ohnesorge
Friday, 27 April 2007 08:03

DWI defendants without identification would be automatically fingerprinted and photographed under a bill recommended by a Senate committee yesterday.

Lawmakers hope the bill will help officers better track DWI offenders who do not show up for court. Similar legislation in the House met the unanimous support of a judiciary committee. The House measure would allow officers to photograph drivers without IDs if they believe the suspect is lying about his or her identity.