In other ASU news, internationally renown artist Brenda Mauney Council will begin painting a series of murals in the atrium of the university library on May 10.

The murals are expected to take about 45 days to complete. Working on a scaffold as high as 75 feet, Council will combine acrylic and water-based paint to create a three-dimensional effect. The central theme, "A Quest for Knowledge," will dominate the mural through symbols and representational forms focusing on Appalachian's academic and athletic programs. The mural will also highlight the history of the community of Boone and the university's continuing legacy. The work is expected to be unveiled in July.
