Am I the only one?

Does anyone else wonder why all this money and attention is being spent on bringing back Joshua Watauga? Web sites, bumper stickers even one person wants to adopt him...?? I am all for people wanting to help the homeless but I have to wonder, since no one knows his true identity then they must know nothing of his past and wouldn't it be a shame if all the "Do Gooders" found out they helped a murderer, a thief or a rapist? perhaps he's robbed a bank or molested a child...That's why he has chosen to be what he is, a homeless guy with no identity.

Hey, he could be a real nice guy with no criminal past then that would make my point mute but no one knows and it just blows me away that 15,000 people want him back so he can sell rocks and poems on the streets. With all the complaining I read on this site about busing in homeless from other cities I have to wonder why so many are fighting to bring back a homeless man? Just my thoughts. What are yours?
