

Judges to be evaluated

Written by

Tuesday, 04 September 2007 20:00

North Carolina judges will be monitored under a new pilot program that's expected to begin this fall. The North Carolina Bar Association's Board of Governors approved the program to monitor the judges, and, if it's successful, a full-scale judicial evaluation could start as early as next year. Not only could the program improve judges' performances, it could also give voters more information on judicial candidates.