A series of devastating wildfires continue to threaten southern California. Hundreds of homes have been lost and several injured in blazes some officials are calling the worst in history. Help is on the way, however, and part of it is coming from Boone, North Carolina. Boone-based Samaritan's Purse disaster trucks are on their way to help with the relief effort. The trucks, containing wheelbarrows, chainsaws, axes and other firefighting tools, left North Wilkesboro yesterday and are expected to arrive in California by the weekend.
