We're on the cusp of another round of winter weather, with a blast of cold air crossing the state west to east, and bringing us at least a day—maybe two—of snow. The arctic air will push us back into the single digit range for lows as the week goes along, with wind chills again in the dangerous range. We begin to emerge from the deep freeze over the weekend, but the opening of winterfest should be, well, quite wintery. Bundle up!
