So we sprang forward, then started spring officially last week, but the rollercoaster weather we had all winter seems to still be with us, with another round of cold and snow this week. After a couple of spring-like days to kick off the season, we're back to winter over the next three days, starting with yesterday's band of rain that was followed by cold air settling in. Then another round of moisture tomorrow could bring even several inches of snow to parts of the High Country before more cold on Wednesday before we get another warm-up for the weekend. Snow is predicted to start in the early morning hours of Tuesday, so stay tuned for another round of closings and cancellations.
