

Still More Snow

Written by Kenneth Reece

Sunday, 20 December 2009 07:15

The National Weather Service is still projecting another 1 to 4 inches of snow are possible for the High Country today. That will only add to the double digit totals that fell since Friday morning. Some parts of the area are reporting as much as 2 feet of snow already.

Caution should still be used on roads through out the area as many are partially or totally snow covered.

There still remains the possibility of black ice on roads tonight as lows are predicted for the upper teens.

Temperatures are not projected to get above freezing until Tuesday, with highs in the lower 40s. With the same highs forecast on Wednesday the High Country could see snow again on Christmas Eve and Christmas Day with a slight chance in the forecast.