Appalachian State University quarterback DeAndre Presley returned to practice on Wednesday. Only this time, the ASU senior got a little more involved. Unlike Monday and Tuesday when he attended practice in shorts and a t-shirt, Presley actually did some throwing before and during practice. He was also involved in some non-contact drills. However, no announcement on who the starting quarterback will be for Saturday's game at The Citadel has been made. Jamal Jackson, with Presley nursing a bruised shoulder, has been taking snaps with the first-team offense since last week. Presley was injured against Wofford College on October 1, Our coverage from Charleston, SC, on Saturday begins at 12 noon on AM 1450, WATA.
