As the growing season is winding down, the Watauga Farmer's Market is still going strong, serving as a community gathering place as well as a place to buy fresh veggies and a wide variety of foods, crafts, and, well, maybe even some critters. This collection of fuzzy farm folks were well behaved at last week's market. The Watauga Farmer's Market will continue through October, Saturdays at the Horn in the West parking lot, then will hold two holiday markets surrounding the Thanksgiving weekend.
