

Fox To Coach Broncos In Week 14

Written by Staff Reports

Friday, 29 November 2013 00:28

The Denver Broncos announced on Thursday that head coach John Fox, who suffered a spell of dizziness on a golf course in Charlotte early this month and then had to undergo heart surgery, will return to the team next week. The Broncos have also announced that Fox will be ready to coach the team in Week 14 against the Tennessee Titans.

According to the Broncos, Fox has been cleared by doctors to return as head coach beginning Monday. The team released a statement concerning Fox's return that said, "his recovery from a heart procedure on Nov. 4 has progressed so well."

It's unclear whether Fox will coach from the sidelines or the from the booth (when Texans coach Gary Kubiak returned to his team following his recent health scare, he coached from the booth).

Since Fox has been out, defensive coordinator Jack Del Rio has taken over as the interim, and under his leadership, Denver has gone 2-1 and has taken over first place in the AFC West.

Fox To Coach Broncos In Week 14

Written by Staff Reports

Friday, 29 November 2013 00:28

Photo Courtesy: John Fox, PHOTO SUBMITTED